ABU DHABI / WAM

The UAE announced the launch of Phase 1 of its Research and Development (R&D) Tax Incentives Programme, marking an important step in strengthening the country's innovation ecosystem and supporting sustainable, long-term economic growth.

Under the first phase of the programme, businesses will be able to benefit from a non-refundable R&D tax credit of up to 50% on qualifying expenditure of up to AED5 million. The measure is designed to encourage private-sector investment in research and innovation, while supporting the UAE's ambition to become a global hub for advanced industries and emerging technologies.

The initial design of the incentive takes into account recent developments under the OECD Pillar Two framework, recognising that in the current international tax environment a non-refundable credit is expected to deliver a more favourable and predictable effective tax rate outcome for companies operating in the UAE.
